Description

The difference between what Christians know they should be and what they actually are in practice can cause terrible internal problems and even despair as they see their efforts to live holy lives end in repeated failure under the onslaught of temptation to sin.

George Cutting's little book on this subject gives much-needed help, clearly expounded and illuminated by a number of easily understood and relevant illustrations, together with sound, godly advice. The author emphasizes from the Scriptures the impossibility of ever improving the sinful nature every believer has, and he directs the reader to what God has done in Christ to remedy this situation.
