Description

G. C. Willis, the writer of this book, writes the following in his preface – “It is the earnest desire of those who have labored over these writings that they many be like a finger pointing our hearts to the Feasts of Jehovah, feast that were designed and arranged by the Lord to turn our hearts to Himself, that we might better learn to know His grace, and to cheer us for the dark pathway down here, by a sight of the bright Glory ahead.”

The late author, Christopher Willis, a missionary to China, writes in his usual warm style and shares simply what he has enjoyed from this topic in Leviticus. His extensive knowledge of the Scriptures is coupled with the freshness of his daily life's experiences to provide the book with lots of encouragements.
